Description
The purpose of this course is to introduce students to major trends and movements in theological discourse throughout the twentieth century, with emphasis on the second half of the century and recent years. Students will be exposed to the theological foundations and ideas that characterized significant shifts in theological perspectives, including in method and context. Special attention will be given to postmodern theological discourse, liberation theologies, and the ways in which modern theology has drawn increasing criticism as a product of Western colonialism and hegemony in the contemporary world. The course will invite critical reflection on postmodern and postcolonial studies, Mujerista theology, Feminist theologies, Womanist theologies, Queer theology, liberation theologies, as well as engagements with the relationship between theology and Empire. Related themes include theology and technology, secularization in the church and society, and the socio-political context within which the Church exists today.

Objectives
To demonstrate an understanding of the major trends reflected in late twentieth and early twenty-first century theological discourse.
To examine the theological and ethical methods employed by the various theological perspectives considered.
To explore the interactions of race, gender, class, sexuality, and ethnicity at work in theological interpretation.
To analyze the relationship between the Church and contemporary theology, considering the applicability of theological discourse in public life and the Church’s social witness in the world.

Inclusive Language
LPTS is a seminary that affirms inclusive language, which is a style of writing that seeks to overcome marginalizing terms, language, and stereotypes. Students should avoid using specific pronouns when gender is unknown. Gender pronouns for God should not be used, unless using a direct quote from a theological text or biblical translation. In those cases, use brackets for inclusive language (i.e., His [God’s] glory filled the temple).

Academic honesty
All work you submit in CT is expected to be yours. Any quotation of the words of others must be clearly indicated, and all direct indebtedness must be acknowledged by citation of author and source. Students unfamiliar with issues relating to academic honesty can find help from the staff in the Academic Support Center and should make use of the available resources at an early date, since violations of Seminary policy on academic honesty can lead to a failing grade for the course.

Grading Requirements
(1) Participation and attendance. It is very important for students to be active and informed participates in the course. Students are expected to read all assignments in detail and be prepared to offer thoughtful feedback during class discussions. As graduate students, participants are strongly encouraged to take part in the teaching/learning process, particularly through preparedness and contributions to the course. Students will also be expected to present in class on designated readings at least twice during the semester. (10%) Students will write three 3-page critical analysis papers focused on one of the course readings. These papers should reflect your interaction with the readings, identifying the major argument(s) being advanced and reflect what you find most compelling about the material. The papers should not simply be an outline of the readings, but a critical dialogue and analysis based on your own theological perspective. At least half the paper should be devoted to analyzing the readings, and the other half attending to your own theological voice as a response. (60%)

Write a final reflection paper, 7-10 pages. In the final paper, students will explore a critical theological problem in contemporary theology. Drawing on the course readings as well as additional readings from independent research, student will identify a topic or theme in conversation with the instructor. This paper may also reflect on a contemporary problem confronting the Church, or society in general. (30%)
